

Sharing a regulation of life in common implies a harmony which is not obvious, it requires agreements which are often difficult to find and to carry out, and must always be renewed. On the contrary, when people are forced to accept an order, it produces a reaction of disorder in form of protest which can soon become a revolt. At the same time this entails temporarily a barren and destructive freezing and loss of confidence in the virtues of dialogue. Psychoanalysis proposes a dynamic approach of this situation, which society experiences in larger or smaller groups, at an interpersonal level in family and couple. The challenge of a situation which the protagonists do not find suitable any more will be confronted with the possibility to construct a "mobile order".
